Conference Summary

Today's increasing economic inequality goes hand in hand with an uptick in elite power worldwide, raising concerns about eroding democratic governance and diminishing social cohesion. Although this trend has inspired vital new scholarship, much of this approaches elites through a national lens, and lacks attention to the past and present imperial and (neo)colonial contexts in which they operate. Yet, public debate about the role of oligarchs and kleptocracy, widespread tax evasion and use of offshore finance, and the siphoning of wealth from the Global South through them, all demonstrate the need for greater academic analysis of the transnational - and specifically imperial and (neo)colonial - dimensions of elite formation and power today. This two-day conference will make a major contribution to this scholarly agenda by bringing together leading international and interdisciplinary scholars to explore the roles and influence of contemporary transnational elites in an increasingly unequal world.

Conference Convenors

- Dr Sarah Kunz, University of Essex
- Dr Katie Higgins, University of Oxford
- Professor Mike Savage, London School of Economics and Political Science

Conference Notes

Thematic sessions:

The conference will include four thematic sessions. During these sessions attendees will hear four presentations, followed by a break, followed by chair's response and Q&A/discussion.

Open discussion sessions (in-person only)

At the end of each day, there will be an open discussion session. Please note that these open discussion sessions will be for in-person attendees only. The live stream for online audiences will end at 15:30 on both days.
